

Julie Farneski has been a riding instructor for more than 20 years, teaching hunt seat and lower level dressage to adults and children. She has ridden and cared for horses most of her life and now owns two mares and two geldings. She and her husband own Del-View Farm, Alexandria Township.

Dale Wright And Freedom Farm

Freedom Farm, Kingwood Township, a farm born on the heels of the Sept. 11, 2001 tragedy and initially specializing in dressage, has continued to flourish with the addition of well-known hunter/jumper trainer Dale Wright last year.

According to Freedom Farm owners Pete and Marie D'Costa, Wright's "gentle yet consistent approach" to training all of the hunter/jumpers at the farm allows him to provide "traditional training methods intertwined with a holistic approach".

Formerly of Sacramento, Calif., Wright has 14 years of professional training experience and is an avid competitor as well as a show trainer/instructor.

This past summer, he competed in the prestigious Hampton Classic as well as other area shows.

His past credits include finishing fourth in the $10,000 Mini-Pre of Sacramento and 5th in the $5,000 Special Stake at Pebble Beach, as well as finishing 2nd and 3rd for the Year in 2001 Year-End Green Divisions.

Currently, Dale is focusing on his New Jersey clients at Freedom Farm, and has had great success in helping horses and riders work harmoniously to achieve their individual goals.

Pete D'Costa says he added Wright to the farm last year in order to have a "truly complete and comprehensive equestrian outfit" and to offer hunter/jumper enthusiasts the same high-quality service his dressage clients have received.
