

Julie Farneski has been a riding instructor for more than 20 years, teaching hunt seat and lower level dressage to adults and children. She has ridden and cared for horses most of her life and now owns two mares and two geldings. She and her husband own Del-View Farm, Alexandria Township.

Freedom Farm Adds Hunter/Jumper Trainer

Freedom Farm in Kingwood Township, established by owner/operator Pete D'Costa after the September 11 tragedy, is branching out from dressage and adding a hunter/jumper program led by Dale Wright, formerly of Sacramento, Calif. Wright has been a successful hunter/jumper competitor and a professional trainer for 14 years, taking students from Adult Amateur Hunters to Grand Prix championships.

Dressage Training

Freedom Farm has thus far specialized in dressage training and has recently offered clinics with several international dressage experts. But Mr. D'Costa says he strives to offer a truly complete and comprehensive program with more training options, and so decided to include a hunter/jumper program as part of the facility's offerings.

Wright, according to D'Costa, "has solid goals he plans to bring to fruition here, including creating a winning show clientele, developing long-term relationships, having quality horses for sale, and being client-centered to provide above-par training and lesson programs."
